There was a big crowd to see the steamers off, in fact, there was more fuss than there is over the sailing of the Manchuria. The Likelike got off soon after noon, but there was such a crowd and so much freight for the Kinau that she did not go until one o'clock. The wharf was crowded with drays and wagons until noon, at which hour the agents ceased to receive MORTUARY REPORT freight for the departing vessels. In spite of the crowd everything went off smoothly and there were no accidents.
